PROGRAMME Saturday, 22nd October 2011

The Annual School is designed to bring academics and society members together once a year, for a full day symposium. Most of the members of the society are people interested in archaeology and history rather than being academically trained in the disciplines. This year we have decided to look at how South Africa's various people have developed over the last 500 years. Who were the indigenous people of South Africa? In the many migrations, black and white, into the country that we now call South Africa, how have the various people developed and interacted with each other to form our modern society? All our speakers are experts in their fields and we really value their generosity in making themselves available to address us.

Professor Karim Sadr, Head of the School of Geography, Archaeology & Environmental studies at Wits: The last of the Late Stone Age: archaeological evidence from the farmer frontiers and the demise of the hunting and gathering way of life.

Professor Fred Morton, University of Botswana: The Nature of Tswana entities before and after the upheavals of the early 19th century.

Gavin Whitelaw, KwaZulu-Natal Museum, Pietermaritzburg:
Aspects of the Late Iron Age in KwaZulu-Natal.

Professor Tom Huffman, Emeritus Professor, School of Geography, Archaeology & Environmental Studies at Wits: The Archaeology of Venda Origins.

Dr Antonia Malan, Dept. of Archaeology, UCT:
Land and cattle: collaboration and conflict in the 17/18th century Cape.

Professor John Lambert, Emeritus Professor and Research Fellow in the Dept of History, UNISA: The British in the Cape and Port Natal.

Professor Karen Harris, Dept of Historical and Heritage Studies at the University of Pretoria:
The Mining Migrants: White, Black and Yellow (1886-1910).

Dr Alex Schoeman, School of Geography, Archaeology & Environmental Studies at Wits: Conclusion and final discussion.
